Dems target Trump rhetoric after deadly Texas, Ohio shootings

The comments came after two young white males opened fire in both El Paso and Dayton.

Two mass shootings that killed 30 people in Texas and Ohio reverberated across the United States' political arena on Sunday as Democratic presidential candidates called for stricter gun laws and accused President Donald Trump of stoking racial tensions.

Dozens were also wounded Saturday and early Sunday in shootings within just 13 hours of each other in carnage that shocked a country that has become grimly accustomed to mass shootings and heightened concerns about domestic terrorism.

The first massacre occurred on Saturday morning in the heavily Hispanic border city of El Paso, where a gunman killed 20 people at a Walmart store before surrendering. Texas Gov. Greg Abbott said the rampage appeared to be a hate crime, and police said they believed the suspect, a 21-year-old white man, may have been racially motivated.

Across the country, a gunman opened fire in a downtown district of Dayton, Ohio, early on Sunday, killing nine people and wounding at least 26 others, police and the city mayor said. The assailant was shot dead by police.

The El Paso shooting reverberated on the campaign trail for next year's presidential election, with several Democratic candidates repeating calls for tighter gun control measures and others drawing connections to a resurgence in white nationalism and xenophobic politics in the United States.

Several candidates pointed a finger at Trump.

"Donald Trump is responsible for this. He is responsible because he is stoking fears and hatred and bigotry," U.S. Sen. Cory Booker, a 2020 Democratic presidential candidate, said on CNN's "State of the Union."

> "Donald Trump is responsible for this. He is responsible because he is stoking fears and hatred and bigotry."

Trump branded the El Paso shooting "an act of cowardice" in a Twitter post on Saturday. On Sunday he said state and local authorities were working together to investigate both attacks.

The White House did not immediately respond to requests for comment on Sunday. Speaking to ABC's "This Week," acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney rebutted the Democrats' allegations and attributed the shootings to "sick" individuals.

"There's no benefit here in trying to make this a political issue, this is a social issue and we need to address it as that," he said.

Beto O'Rourke, the former congressman from El Paso, said he believed Trump was a white nationalist whose anti-immigrant rhetoric stoked divisions.

"Let's be very clear about what is causing this and who the president is," O'Rourke told CNN. "He is an open avowed racist and is encouraging more racism in this country."

U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders also took Trump to task. "We must come together as a nation to reject this dangerous and growing culture of bigotry espoused by Trump and his allies," he said late on Saturday. REUTERS

Raiders receiving legend Branch dies at 71

2 Cliff Branch, a three-time All-Pro wide receiver who won three Super Bowls during his 14-year NFL career, all with the Oakland Raiders, has died, the team confirmed late Saturday. The cause of death was not immediately known. Branch, who turned 71 on Thursday, was found dead Saturday in his hotel room, according to the Bullhead City (Ariz.) Police Department. No foul play was revealed after an initial investigation, and it was determined that Branch died of natural causes. "Cliff Branch touched the lives of generations of Raiders fans," the Raiders said in a release. "His loss leaves an eternal void for the Raiders family, but his kindness and loving nature will be fondly remembered forever. Cliff's on-field accomplishments are well documented and undeniably Hall of Fame worthy, but his friendship and smile are what the Raider Nation will always cherish." REUTERS

Khmer Rouge's 'Brother No. 2' dead at 93

3 Nuon Chea, the chief ideologist and 'Brother No. 2' of Cambodia's Khmer Rouge, whose brutal rule in the 1970s led to the deaths of some 2 million people, died on Sunday at the age of 93, a court spokesman said. A U.N.-backed court found Chea guilty of genocide and sentenced him to life in prison last year, almost four decades after the Maoist regime which oversaw Cambodia's "Killing Fields" was overthrown. Chea was among a small clique — led by 'Brother No. 1', Pol Pot — of mostly French-educated communists who rose to lead a bloody revolution against a U.S.-backed government after their country was engulfed by the Vietnam War. The extremist ideology of the 1975-79 regime sought to turn Cambodia back to "Year Zero" in its quest for a peasant utopia. REUTERS

'Hobbs & Shaw' tops box office with $61M debut weekend

The "Fast and Furious" franchise has earned more than $5 billion worldwide.

Universal's "Fast & Furious Presents: Hobbs & Shaw" crossed the box office finish line in first place, debuting with $60.8 million from 4,253 North American locations.

The big-budget spinoff, starring Dwayne Johnson and Jason Statham, is expected to be an even bigger draw overseas, where the action franchise is hugely popular. "Hobbs & Shaw" kicked off internationally with a robust $120 million for a global start of $180 million. Though standalone vehicles aren't always as muscular as official franchise sequels, "Hobbs & Shaw" will have to lure crowds across the globe throughout the dog days of summer to justify its sizable $200 million budget. The "Fast & Furious" series has generated over $5 billion worldwide across eight films.

"We're very thrilled with the global release, a tremendous start with a big market like China still to come," said Jim Orr, Universal's president of domestic distribution.

Opening weekend crowds skewed expectedly male, with boys and men accounting for nearly 60 percent of tickets sold. "Hobbs & Shaw" enticed moviegoers young and old, as 50 percent of audiences were over the age of 25. Those who showed up this weekend were high on the action and thrills, awarding the film with an "A-" CinemaScore and a 90 percent audience rating on Rotten Tomatoes.

Orr attributes the film's "very broad appeal" directly to Jonhson and his massive fan base.

"[Director] David Leitch, The Rock and Jason Statham created an original and really thrilling adventure that complements the franchise tremendously well," he said.

Its $61 million domestic opening weekend marks the biggest bow for Johnson and Statham's careers outside of the main "Fast & Furious" franchise. The $180 million figure also represents Universal's fifth-highest-grossing global launch ever, behind "The Fate of the Furious," "Jurassic World," "Furious 7" and "Fifty Shades of Grey."

In "Hobbs & Shaw," the first spinoff in the "Fast & Furious" universe, Johnson's Luke Hobbs and Statham's Deckard Shaw unite to take down a genetically enhanced anarchist (Idris Elba). The star-studded cast also includes Helen Mirren and Vanessa Kirby. David Leitch, known for his work on "Deadpool 2," directed the film, which was written by "Fast" vets Chris Morgan and Drew Pearce.

Despite the new nationwide release, Sony and director Quentin Tarantino's "Once Upon a Time in Hollywood" had a strong second weekend in theaters, placing third on domestic box office charts. The R-rated drama with Leonardo DiCaprio, Brad Pitt and Margot Robbie collected $20 million, marking a 51 percent decline from its inaugural outing. After 10 days of release, "Once Upon a Time in Hollywood" had made $78 million in North America.

Meanwhile, reigning champ Disney's "The Lion King" slid to the No. 2 spot with a solid $38 million. The hyperrealistic remake — directed by Jon Favreau — is the fourth Disney movie this year to cross $400 million in domestic ticket sales. With $430 million in North America and $1.19 billion internationally, "The Lion King" is now the second-biggest film of the year both domestically and globally. REUTERS

Protests are pushing Hong Kong to 'extremely dangerous edge'

The Hong Kong government said that violence and illegal protests were spreading.

Hong Kong's government said violence and illegal protests were pushing the city to an "extremely dangerous edge", as police fired multiple rounds of tear gas to disperse hundreds of anti-government protesters on Sunday and Beijing said it would not let the situation persist.

The Chinese-controlled city, an Asian financial hub, has been rocked by months of protests that began against a proposed bill to allow people to be extradited to stand trial in mainland China and have developed into calls for greater democracy.

A general strike aimed at bringing the city to a halt is planned for Monday. Many flight departures were shown as being cancelled on Monday and a source and media reports said this was due to aviation workers planning to strike.

Late on Sunday, hundreds of masked protesters blocked major roads, once again that violence and illegal protests were spreading and pushing Hong Kong toward what it called "the extremely dangerous edge."

Such acts had already gone far beyond the limits of peaceful and rational protests and would harm Hong Kong's society and economic livelihood, it said.

After the peaceful demonstrations finished earlier on Sunday, protesters blocked roads in the town of Tseung Kwan O in the New Territories, set up barricades and hurled hard objects including bricks at a police station.

Police fired tear gas to disperse hundreds of protesters after a separate rally in the island's Western district where thousands of people gathered to urge authorities to listen to public demands.

Protesters had begun a march towards China's Liaison Office, which has been a flashpoint at previous protests. REUTERS

Russian police detain over 800 in opposition crackdown in Moscow

Russian police forcibly detained over 800 people attending a protest in Moscow on Saturday to demand free elections, including prominent activist Lyubov Sobol, after authorities warned the demonstration was illegal.

Police removed Sobol, an ally of jailed opposition politician Alexei Navalny, from a taxi and bundled her into a van minutes before the start of what anti-Kremlin activists described as a peaceful walk to protest against the exclusion of their candidates from an election next month.

In another blow to Navalny, Russian investigators opened a criminal investigation into the alleged laundering of 1 billion rubles ($15.3 million) by his anti-corruption foundation. Navalny and his allies say the foundation, which has published a slew of embarrassing investigations into government officials, is transparently financed from public donations.

OVD-Info, an independent monitoring group, said police had detained 828 people in Moscow on Saturday, in some cases beating them with truncheons as they lay on the floor. Reuters reporters witnessed dozens of arrests. In one case police carried off a man as he clung upside down to his bicycle.

Police said they had detained 600 and that 1,500 had attended the protest, though footage of demonstrations which flared in different parts of Moscow suggested many more had taken part. Opposition activists later posted screen shots online of police reports suggesting around 10,000 had attended.

Saturday's protest was smaller than one a week earlier, but underlined the determination of some Kremlin critics – especially younger people – to keep pressing to open up Russia's tightly-choreographed political system.

Many but not all of those detained were later released by police, including Sobol who was fined 300,000 rubles ($4,596) for violating Russia's tough protest laws.

The focus of protesters' anger is a prohibition on a number of opposition-minded candidates, some of whom are allies of Navalny, from taking part in a September election for Moscow's city legislature.

That vote, though local, is seen as a dry run for a national parliamentary election in 2021.

Authorities say opposition candidates failed to collect enough genuine signatures to register. The excluded candidates say that is a lie and insist on taking part in a contest they believe they could win.

"They (the authorities) are wiping their feet on us," said Elena, a student attending Saturday's protest. REUTERS

Aries Don't let a change of heart disrupt your life. Whether it's you or someone else who wants a change, it's best to move forward with an open mind and a positive attitude.

Taurus Speak up about your plans. Not everyone will like what you decide, but at least you'll flush out opposition and encourage suggestions that can help you make beneficial adjustments.

Gemini Look at the whole scenario, not just what you want to see. If you are honest with yourself and others, it will be easier to make the right choice.

Cancer Listen to complaints and do your best to make adjustments that will keep everyone happy without going over budget or jeopardizing your reputation, status or position.

Leo Take part in events that will broaden your awareness. Engage in discussions that will give you a better understanding of what's possible and what isn't. Romance is highlighted.

Virgo You may be able to keep a secret, but someone you share it with won't. If you want to surprise someone or make a change without interference, do so without letting anyone else know about it.

Libra Make a difference by putting your energy into something gratifying, helpful or useful, instead of trying to please someone who doesn't appreciate what you do for him or her.

Scorpio Take an innovative approach when dealing with people who are not easily persuaded. A change can be made if you go about it the right way. Choose to be productive, not pushy.

Sagittarius You can reach your goal and advance or improve your lifestyle if you are reasonable, stay within budget, and rely on your skills and experience. Romance is highlighted.

Capricorn Keep your emotions hidden. You'll accomplish the most if you are reasonable, organized and prepared for whatever roadblock you encounter. A joint venture will fall short of what's promised.

Aquarius Don't change what's working for you. Look for an alternative way to solve any problem you face. An open mind, a willingness to work and positive negotiations will pay off.

Pisces Your input will be welcome by most; however, someone you are in a relationship with may not agree with what you do or with whom you associate. Walk away from temptation. EUGENIA LAST

Funk duo Tuxedo hit the stage in Philly this week

Catch Tuxedo tonight at 8 p.m. at the Fillmore.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

This duo certainly knows how to get the party started. Grammy-nominated R&B and soul recording artist Mayer Hawthorne and Grammy-nominated hip-hop producer Jake One make up the popular funk duo Tuxedo, and both Hawthorne and One gave Metro the scoop on what to expect from their new album and summer tour.

You've both had plenty of individual success in the music industry before becoming Tuxedo. When and why did you decide to join forces?
Jake One (JO): We started doing tracks for fun without any intention of releasing them, in 2010. We met through hip-hop and realized we were both into early '80s funk and R&B. That was our initial connection.

Your third studio album, "Tuxedo III," was just released. Can you tell me a little about what went into making this album?
Mayer Hawthorne (MH): This is the first album that we've had guests on. We wanted to keep it organic and only work with people who were really family. Benny Sings, MF DOOM, Dam-Funk, Leven Kali ... they really brought a new dimension to what we do, but it still feels natural.

You utilize a lot of different sounds and instruments to make your eclectic funk music. Do you feel as though you like experimenting with those sounds more as time goes on?

JO: Playing with new sounds and textures is a crucial component of what we do. I'll buy a new vintage synth and it will spark off a couple songs. On this album, we wanted to use some more classic drum machines like the 808 and DMX. It was a new twist for us.

This genre does feel nostalgic even with the new sounds and advancements. What would you say makes the funk dance type of music so timeless?
JO: A really great funk groove is one that is so infectious you don't tire of it. The world has been listening to songs Zapp made for 40 years now, and they still sound new somehow.

MH: Feeling good and having fun is always gonna be in style.

Jumping to your tour that also just recently kicked off, what do you both like the most about taking your music on the road?
JO: More than anything I love seeing the reaction from the crowd. I've spent a lot of my career producing behind the scenes, so it's always cool to see firsthand how much the music is touching people.

MH: Yeah, connecting with the fans is definitely the best part. And then the record stores and food spots are a close second.

What would you tell people to expect at one of your shows?
MH: We don't just stand up there and play the songs. It's a real show. We work extremely hard at this.

What does the future hold for Tuxedo after this tour?
MH: We are probably gonna take all the proceeds from the tour and buy more rare synthesizers so we can make more tunes.

Director John Downer gives Metro the scoop on the groundbreaking new docuseries "Serengeti."

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Have you ever wondered what it would be like to delve into a pride of lions or a herd of elephants and really get an up-close look at the relationships and connections these animals have as a family?

Now you can, with Discovery's latest revolutionary series "Serengeti," directed by nature documentary expert John Downer. Downer's dream was to get an intimate look at these magnificent animals that call the Serengeti home and explore what makes them just like us.

With incredible new technology and years of filming with a dramatized look rather than just a view from afar, Downer and the team working on the fascinating docuseries achieved just that. Downer sat down with Metro to give the scoop on the groundbreaking new series.

Why did you choose to study the animals that inhabit Serengeti?

I think the Serengeti is like nowhere else on Earth. I am still so connected with it — I've made so many films there in the past. But the reason it draws you back is the fact that those animals are some of the most charismatic in the world. They live literally cheek-by-jowl, so they interact in a way that you don't get anywhere else These are just incredible animals — every single one of them is a star. A lion's a star, an elephant's a star, a hyena is ... normally less of a star, but still an incredible supporting role. We wanted to look at these animals in a way that hadn't really been done before and look at the connections between them, so we needed a place with loads of connections, and [where] they're interacting all of the time. [We also wanted] a look into their family lives. Every one of those animals has an incredible story to tell and they are really complex. What we wanted to do was look at that behavior in a human way. Each of those animals and the way they interact and behave are so similar to our own lives.

Do you think this unique approach will help audiences connect more with the animals?

That's certainly our intention, I think it is a way to relate to them because so often natural history — and I've been making it for over 30 years now — can be distancing. What we try to do is to explain the behavior and the emotional drive and the relationship, and all of this is based on their biology. It's quite hard to articulate in a cold documentary. What we wanted was a dramatized depiction of those interrelationships and their needs and desires and everything else that we relate to. That's why we're seeing those connections, because those connections run deep — we just don't think they're there.

Can you tell us more about what filming techniques were used in "Serengeti"?

The whole style and intent was to go into the animal world rather than just see things from a distance. It was a chance to bring all of my experiences there. We used mainly what we call "spy cameras," which are a whole range of different cameras that can get close to those animals — even into a whole pride of lions. Such as a remote control buggy that is protected against the lions but can move among them. They very quickly get used to it and it just becomes part of the pride, so you're getting incredibly intimate views. We were also able to utilize the latest stabilization camera technology, which meant we could film "on the move," with different lenses from a vehicle, without the bumps from the movement you get normally. So you have this incredibly energetic and close feel to transport you there. That was a dream of mine. It's been a dream from the very beginning.

What do you hope audiences take away from the series?
We as early humans walked the plains of the Serengeti with those animals, and at that time we just considered those animals the same as us, just other animals; we were connected. We've become separated now in our own worlds, and what we wanted to do was reignite that connection and realize that these animals — when you delve into their lives, connections, troubles and everything else — they're so like us. That recognition should give us empathy. They're more than just animals, they're our close kin.

Catch "Serengeti" every Sunday at 8 p.m. on Discovery Channel.

Jim Gaffigan on 'Them That Follow' and his excitement for more serious roles

The actor-comedian stars alongside Olivia Coleman and Walton Goggins.

PAT KING

1091/ JULIUS CHIU

With so much tribal division in our country currently, it can be a sobering and refreshing thing to remember that no matter which camp you belong to, we generally all have more in common with each other than we actually realize. The new film, "Them That Follow," written and directed by Britt Pulton and Dan Madison Savage, follows a close-knit Pentecostal community who live off the beaten path in Appalachia.

The story follows a young girl named Mara, played by Alice Englert, as she tries to conceal that she has cheated on her soon-to-be husband Garrett, played by Lewis Pullman, with the man she loves, Augie, played by Thomas Mann, and is now pregnant. More importantly, Mara is scared that her preacher father Lemuel, played by the always-riveting Walton Goggins, will catch wind of her transgressions against the snake-healing church that the community is built upon. As Augie tries to atone for his sins by receiving venom from a poisonous snake, his parents Hope and Zeke, played by Olivia Coleman and Jim Gaffigan, need to decide which side they should take: to support these young children or their religion.

Given this tough position, how much suspension of reality can you truly have before it finally becomes dangerous?

"It's interesting," explains Gaffigan, when I ask him this question over the phone. "Because I almost feel that there is a part of me — obviously, we're dealing with this Pentecostal religious sect and it is kind of isolated out of necessity, because we're dealing with snake healing — but what I think in the end this movie is about is parents and their children.

"I think the directors did such a great job in that it's not simply an indictment of the Pentecostal belief system. It's about how a daughter and a son have to make their own way in this world."

Gaffigan was equally thrilled to be acting out such profound material with such a top-notch and versatile cast. "It was amazing," says Gaffigan. "Olivia and Walton are really funny people but also relish the opportunity to do these deep, dark scenes."

"Them That Follow" is the latest in a number of dramatic roles that the comedian has appeared in as of late. He hopes to take on more in the future.

"In a way, it really comes down to the most interesting characters and stories end up being dramas," he explains. "Comedies are fun and I love doing stand-up. I proudly identify myself as a stand-up. But the more complex acting roles are in dramatic roles."

5 Fun things to do in Philly this week

Catch a flick in a garden, make your very own pizza creation, and much more.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Looking for some fun things to do in Philly this week? We've got you covered. Here are five fun things to do in Philly this week.

Pizza After Dark
Head to Rittenhouse Square hot spot Pizzeria Vetri to check out this delicious evening extravaganza. Guests can reserve tickets for two people, and as a duo, you will learn how to make your own pizza creations with the best tips and techniques from Pizzeria Vetri's culinary team. Tickets also get guests a carafe of house wine or a pitcher of beer, dessert and a behind-the-scenes look at what goes on at this popular eatery. There are a few options for times: Anyone interested in participating can choose between classes starting at 7:30 p.m., 8 p.m., 8:30 p.m. and 9 p.m. There are a limited number of spaces available for each class, so be sure to reserve your slot as soon as possible.
Aug. 6, Pizzeria Vetri, 1615 Chancellor St., $85 (for two people), pizzeriavetri.com

Movie Night in the Garden
Head to Frankford Hall this Monday to catch a flick in their comfortable beer garden. The popular German fare hot spot will be teaming up with Carlsburg Brewing Company for the event, and everyone is invited out to make the most out of the summer evening while watching "Wayne's World." Any Philadelphian who attends will receive free Carlsburg swag and complimentary popcorn. There will also be plenty of pay-as-you-go beer and food such as Frankford Hall's enticing potato pancakes, Wiener schnitzel, bratwurst selection and German flatbread. There will be a photo booth at the event available to snap some pictures and themed "Wayne's World" attire is encouraged.
Aug. 5, sunset-10:30 p.m., Frankford Hall, 1210 Frankford Ave., free, frankfordhall.com

Balboa Meets Oyster House Supper Club
Chef Alex Garfinkel's Balboa Catering is teaming up with Chef Aaron Gottesman of Oyster House, along with Dad's Hat PA Rye, for another delicious edition of Headhouse Square's Supper Club. Live music will be provided by Emily Drinker, followed by the enticing five-course meal prepared by Garfinkel and Gottesman. Dinner will feature a cobia crudo checkerboard; cucumbers and corn; chilled lobster salad; a dry-aged grilled strip steak with fermented tomato harissa, smoky eggplant dip and broccoli stem salsa verde; plus plums and pluots with Fat Cat cheese ice cream, grilled wildflower honey cake and smoked plum compote for dessert.
Aug. 7, 6 p.m., The Shambles at Headhouse Square, 2nd and Pine streets, $95, balboacatering.com

Lehigh Valley Musikfest
If you're in the mood for some sweet beats and a scenic drive, the Lehigh Valley Musikfest is the perfect destination for you this week. This colorful extravaganza spans over 10 days and is the nation's largest free, non-gated music festival. Musikfest features over 450 performances on 14 stages (13 of which have no admission charge) plus a plethora of enticing food options such as The Bethlehem Dairy Store, Island Noodles, Aw Shucks Corn and Chick n' Cone. This event is perfect for the whole family: Aside from the great music, there will be plenty of activities for kiddos including arts and crafts and talented street performers. Check the official site for a full lineup and more information.
Through Aug. 11, times vary, 101 Founders Way, Bethlehem, prices vary, discoverlehighvalley.com

Mt. Airy Supper Sessions
Mt. Airy's signature food and drink festival recently announced their new schedule for the summer season, and all the fun will now take place right on Germantown Avenue. Eleven of the area's top bars and restaurants will be setting up tables and chairs along the street while serving up enticing dishes, savory bites and sweet treats. There will also be a few popular food trucks offering delectable culinary options. Also returning to the Supper Sessions this year is the popular "Go Cup." According to a release, the collectible stainless-steel cups are a fundraiser for Mt. Airy CDC. The $10 cost per cup helps support the event while earning the buyer drink specials at the five bars on the block: Earth, McMenamin's, Nonna, Grain Exchange, and Milo. This event happens the first Wednesday of every month throughout the summer season, until October.
First Wednesday of every month until October, times vary, 7100 block Germantown Avenue, prices vary, mtairycdc.org

NFL betting: Saints preview, NFC trends

Get up to $250 in free money at MetroBet.us/Sugar.

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the Founder and Editor in Chief of MetroBet.

The Saints aren't going anywhere.

Drew Brees is still elite, Michael Thomas is arguably the top receiver in the game, and their overall defense remains stout (ranking 14th in both points and yards allowed in 2018 under defensive coordinator Dennis Allen).

The only question here at MetroBet.us/Sugar regarding slamming the Over on their season win total is whether or not the over-under of 10.5 wins is too high?

In each of the past two seasons in the NFL, only seven teams have won 11 games or more. Another interesting trend in the NFC has been that teams that suffer losses in the conference title game have been taking major steps backward the following year. Getting so close to the ultimate goal of reaching a Super Bowl but coming up just an inch short is taxing, for sure. Check it out:

Vikings 2018 (no playoffs)

Packers 2017 (no playoffs)

Cardinals 2016 (no playoffs)

Packers 2015 (lost divisional playoffs)

49ers 2014 (no playoffs)

GETTY IMAGES

Given how crushing New Orleans' loss to the Rams was in the NFC title game this past January only adds another layer to it.

But here's guessing it serves as a form of motivation, instead, as Sean Payton can play the "us against the world" card all year long and have his players actually buy in considering the level at which they were screwed last season.

Last year's Saints roster was incredibly talented, and with a couple breaks here or there, they could have turned in an undefeated regular season. Their only losses were an all-time crazy 48-40 shootout loss in Week 1 to Tampa Bay, a 13-10 road loss the weekend after Thanksgiving to a streaking Dallas team, and a meaningless Week 17 loss to the Panthers in which Brees sat.

Advancing the case to take the New Orleans' Over here is that they added tight end Jared Cook, who could immediately have a Jimmy Graham-like connection with Brees.

The play: $10 on Saints Over 10.5 wins

TWEET OF THE DAY

@TheCousinSal

I commend the NFL for fixing the first pre-season game of the year.

Phillies at Diamondbacks

Monday night's series opener between the Phillies and D-backs at Chase Field should be fairly high-scoring.

Vince Velazquez (3-6, 4.40 ERA) gets the call for the Phillies, and his numbers inflate significantly when he pitches on the road compared to when he plays at home. Velazquez's opponent batting average jumps from .228 at Citizens Bank Park to .263 everywhere else, and his ERA goes from 4.05 to 4.60. He's struggled against a few of these Arizona hitters before, including left fielder David Peralta (4-for-7, 1.571 OPS) and catcher Alex Avila (3-for-3 with a home run).

Merrill Kelly counters for the Diamondbacks, and he was rocked in his last two starts to the tune of 14 earned runs over 8 1/3 innings against two moribund offenses in the Orioles and Marlins. He hasn't won a start since acing the Phillies over 7 2/3 innings on June 12, but this lineup should have a better idea of what to expect from Kelly this time around.

Neither bullpen should be of much help for Under bettors, as the D-backs are 16th in ERA this year while the Phillies are 21st.

Nola returning to ace form

The Phillies' headlining arm has regained his elite stuff this summer, while a former starter is finding his way in the bullpen.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The Phillies might not have gotten the front-line starting-pitching help that they needed at the MLB trade deadline, but their ace is finally returning to form.

It hasn't been a consistent 2019 for ace Aaron Nola compared to his coming-out party last season, which was always going to be difficult to follow up.

He finished third in the 2018 National League Cy Young Award voting behind Jacob deGrom and Max Scherzer, going 17-6 with a 2.37 ERA.

A large portion of the opening three months this season was a struggle for Nola, though the Phillies managed to take a hold of first place in the division.

The 26-year-old righty hardly looked like a Cy Young challenger, posting a 4.89 ERA in his first 15 starts.

He was susceptible to the long ball, allowing 13 home runs during that span while his control suffered. After posting a 3.96 strikeout-to-walk ratio in 2018, that number dipped to a much more mediocre 2.5 during his rough stretch.

The Phillies were left scrambling for answers, which had conspiracy theorists tabling several ideas as to why the star was struggling.

Nola was coming off a 2018 season in which he pitched 212 innings, by far the largest workload he had ever experienced. His previous career high was 168 innings in 2017.

The residual effects from such a taxing season might have taken a toll on his arm.

Some suggested the new baseballs proved difficult for Nola to grip his dominant curveball, thus depleting his killer pitch.

A more realistic, easy-to-prove option was the possibility of a physical ailment — even a minor one that affected his mechanics.

Nola missed no time, continued eating innings, and eventually regained his stuff. It hasn't been enough to stop the Phillies from dipping down the standings of the division throughout the summer, however.

Still, he is performing like the expected ace, which was punctuated by a seven-inning gem on Saturday against the Chicago White Sox. Nola allowed just a single run on three hits while striking out 10.

Over his past nine starts, he's been nearly unhittable with a 4-1 record, 1.91 ERA and 73 strikeouts in 61.1 innings of work.

His control and put-away stuff returned as well, with his strikeout ratio up to a 3.48 mark in that time frame.

While he excels, other parts of the rotation are showing signs of hitting their stride.

The inconsistent Vince Velasquez, who gets the ball on Monday against the Arizona Diamondbacks, has allowed just two runs in his last 10.2 innings of work.

Jason Vargas' debut was also promising as he gave up two runs in six innings on Friday against the White Sox.

In the meantime, manager Gabe Kapler might have found the perfect spot for the once-struggling Nick Pivetta.

The starter, who posted a 5.80 ERA in 12 starts this season, was moved to the bullpen in mid-July.

Since the move, the righty has recorded 11.2 innings of work in six outings and has posted an ERA of 2.31.

That included his first career save on Saturday, in which he had to record the final six outs of the evening.

There's also been a change in his demeanor, as noticed by his teammates.

"His intensity has shot way up," Nola said of Pivetta. "His fastball is nasty, his curveball's nasty, he's just getting after it."

DEPRESSED?

Are you treating your depression with medication? Are you still feeling depressed?

If so, please call Hassman Research Institute about participating in our research study of an investigational drug for adults with treatment-resistant depression.

Qualified participants must: • Be 18 or older • Be taking prescribed antidepressant medication • Be currently experiencing a depressive episode

Insurance is not required to participate in our study, and all study-related care and study medications are provided at no charge. Transportation and compensation up to $7,500 for time and travel may be available.
